Survey takers from the Utah Wellbeing Project

The Utah Wellbeing Project, led by Dr. Coutney Flint of USU Sociology, was featured on Utah's Fox 13 News in an interview on February 5, 2021.

The survey provides city leaders and planners with information on local residents' wellbeing and other local perspectives. The Utah Wellbeing Survey tracks demographic characteristics for transparency on the representativeness of survey participants and varying insights within communities.

This project is based on partnerships with over 30 cities in Utah. Nearly 11,000 surveys have been collected to date and new surveys are underway or imminent in 29 cities. Reports are shared annually with city leaders and planners and can be found below on the project's website.
